Skunk and Blacksnake Fight.

A novel fight was witnessed by the men employed at the pumping station of the Standard Oil Company near Coshocton, N. Y., the other day. It was a battle between an enormous blacksnake and a skunk and it ended in the death of both combatants

The attention of the men was first attracted by the strange actions and loud cawing of a crow which was circling about a spot in a field near by. They went to the spot and saw a large blacksnake with its head raised, and within six feet of it was a skunk which kept going about the snake as if to draw its attention from a small rock ten feet away. On this rock were five young skunks about the size of chipmunks

The snake's tall was coiled about a small oak stump and as the skunk continued its rounds the snake-darted its head repeatedly at its enemy. This continued for a short time, the circles made by the skunk growing smaller and smaller. Then, quick as lightning, the skunk sprang upon the snake and fastened its teeth in the snake's neck. In an instant the snake had two coils around the body of the skunk. The struggle continued for a short time only and then the combatants both lay dead.

The snake was seven feet long. The young skunks were left on the rock as none of the party cared to get within close range of them.

What Was Necessary.

"My principal objection to the story," said the critic, "is that it pretends to be realistic, and yet nothing of the sort could ever happen. It is a physical Impossibility."

in that case," returned the young author, 'it seems to become necessary for us to revise the laws of nature."
